The Organic Cookery School

Janeira Marshall tells us about the cookery course she's planning to do

I love cooking and I'm always experimenting in my parents' kitchen: 0.they've had to eat some weird and wonderful things for dinner! I'd really like to improve my skills, so this summer, during the school holidays, I'm going to do a cookery skills course with the Organic Cookery School, which runs classes for teenagers. ¹ ____ And I'd like to learn to make some great new recipes as well!

My family and I already do our bit for the environment: we save rainwater, only eat food that's in season in order to avoid food miles, and we make sure we recycle plastic, paper and glass. ² ____ They're supposed to protect plants from insects but in reality, if we use too much of them, they can affect human health, and actually create more problems for plants.

My parents have started buying organic food at the supermarket, but it's expensive: you can't grow it quickly, it needs more manual labour to look after it, and there's so much demand for it now that there isn't enough of it. ³ ____ This is so that it doesn't pick up anything bad from food grown with chemicals. Organic farms are usually a long way from towns, so the food still has to be transported, which is another cost. Organic food requires a lot of time, effort – and money!

I'm not sure whether we'll grow our own food during the course at the Organic Cookery School, but I'll find out soon. Dad might let me use part of our garden to grow things in. Then our family will be 'ethical consumers'. We'll only eat what we've grown, there won't be any packaging, and we won't waste important natural resources. ⁴ ____ How cool is that?!

As well as cooking with organic produce, I'm looking forward to learning about nutrition on the course. This is about getting the right type of food for good health and growth. I'm thinking about stopping eating meat, too, so it will be even more important for me to learn about the right things to eat and what my body needs. ⁵ ____ This isn't true, but you do need to know which foods to get them from, so I'm going to find out!

I know that we're going to make meals from scratch on the course. ⁶ ____ For example, we're going to learn to bake bread and make pasta and sauces, and I'm going to ask about making mayonnaise. The stuff you buy in jars is white, but when you make the thing from eggs, it's more yellow in colour. We also get to taste things and take things home for our families to try. I can't wait to start the course!
