A LESSON LEARNED

(0. przykład) 'If mum and dad knew I was here, they'd have a fit!' Jacky grinned at Mia as the girls followed the queue into the concert hall. Mia rolled her eyes. 'Forget about them. Let's have fun!' she said and pulled Jacky down towards their seats. 1. ____ When the band walked on, they could practically touch their guitars and feel the guys' breath. The audience were immediately on their feet, cheering and singing along to every song. Cameras flashed constantly as the evening was recorded on phones across the concert hall.

This was Jacky's dream come true – her favourite band playing a gig in her hometown! Her heart was beating with excitement, but she was also feeling a little guilty. She remembered telling her parents about the concert a few days ago, with a big smile on her face.

But her mum hadn't smiled. 'No,' she said, frowning. 'You can't go. It's Thursday night – and you've got your last school exam on Friday morning.' Jacky's disappointment was evident. 'Don't worry,' her mum added. 'If you still want to see them, your dad and I will take you to a concert. We're not wealthy, but I'm sure we can afford a night in a good hotel too!'

However, Jacky didn't want to wait. Mia had two tickets and she wanted to be there, on Thursday, with her friend.

***

On Thursday morning, she had packed a bag, hiding an outfit she'd bought especially for the gig at the bottom. 'I'm staying at Mia's tonight,' she had told her parents. 'We're going to revise for the exam together.' It wasn't really a lie, she thought. 2. ____ So why was she feeling so guilty, standing there, listening to the best band in the world with her best friend? A little voice inside her head was saying, 'This is wrong – and you know it!' But she shivered and pushed the voice away. All too soon, it was over, and the girls were back in Mia's room. They were too excited by the evening to want to sleep. They spent hours chatting about the band and how electric the atmosphere in the theatre had been. 3. ____ It was three o'clock before they felt sleepy and closed their eyes.

***

The exam the next day was a total disaster. Jacky was so tired that she couldn't think clearly. Normally, she could have dashed off her answers in super-quick time. 4. ____ Her parents had expected her to walk this exam – everyone had. It wasn't going to happen – and it was all her own fault. 'How did the exam go?' her mum asked when she got home. Jacky lied again.

‘It was fine. It went really well!’ she murmured, and tried to slip past her mum to shut herself away in her room. Her mum blocked her way. She smiled sadly.

‘Well, if you pass, it’ll be a miracle,’ she said and showed Jacky her phone. 5. ____ Jacky could see a crowd of people moving on the screen and the sound – her heart sank as she recognised the music – music she’d heard less than twenty four hours before. Her mum enlarged the screen and two faces came into focus. Jacky and Mia were waving their hands and grinning in the audience at the gig.

‘My friend Gabby was there, too,’ Jacky’s mum said quietly. ‘She had a great time and shared some photos. I hope it was worth it, Jacky.’ Jacky felt absolutely terrible. No, she thought, it hadn’t been worth it. She’d made her mum unhappy and she was probably going to fail her exam.

It had been a hard lesson, but it was the last time she ever lied to her parents.
